Damon and Pythia. It is one of the oldest of philosophical speculations whether a true friendship, in the usual sense of the word, can exist between man and woman. It is easy to see that there must be certain elements in such affections as we are discussing not referable directly to love, and yet distinct from anything to be observed in ordinary friendships of men for men or women for women. It is impossible for a gentleman to be ford of a woman and forget that he is a gentleman. He carries the gallantry of all his grandfathers in his mind and heart and manner. No more than Don Quixote can be divest himself of a certain delerence toward the sex. He wears coth and not iron, carries a cane instead of a lance, hat and not a beimet, not know gules from a fesse, plays upon no instrument of music, reads no romances, frequents no tourneys-yet he is a still, and knightly in all his ways. We wonder sometimes whether the idea of the protection by the stronger of the weaker will ever utterly disappear from our social arrangements. It shows itself in the street, the street-car, the drawing-room to-day as plainly as it was seen of o'd in Spain or in Provence. As a last reminiscence of careful manners, man still takes off his bat to a woman, and all women, though they may deny it, are pleased with the attention. And so in a man's friendly intercourse with ladies, fair or not fair, is be not, metaphorically spesking, always taking off his hat? The platforms have not reformed are so many pure and innocent pleasures out of which the fright of a great scandal may cheat us that it seems really worth while to revise our judgmen', and to inquire if hereafter we must go about in mail of perpetual precaution, as courtly and stately as Sir Charles Grandison, as apprehensive and vigilant as Pamela, thus making the dance of life one long minute?

Now, let us at once eliminate from this dis-Now, let us at once enumbate to the state of us put ourselves upon our honor, and remember that we are responsible to God and our own souls for our good behavior. Several things in this age of general disbelief we low, 11; special inx, 4. Bid to-day. continue to believe in, and awong them are the purity of woman and the honor of man. We are old-fashioned enough to think that not only is it best to be right ard to do right, but that a considerable portion of our fellowcreatures are of the same mind, both in theory and practice, so far as natural infirmity of will and of conscience may permit. We have heretofore discussed the friendship of men for men. That which they may entertain for women must, of course, be modified by obvious considerations; and, as to many matters, it must be divested of extreme familiarity. Still, we are not sure that this does not give to it one of its charms. To a man tired of the toil and bustle of life's endiess coilisions a good woman offers a new atmosphere, and the ministry of her softness and quiet, of her self-abnegation and sympathy. She is outside the fields of battle. She proffers change of association, and a change for the better. Her voice, manners, gentle ways; her wonderfully intelligent sympathies and community of tastes; her feminine methods of thought, and intuitions which are a perpetual surprise; ber confiding and uncontaminated nature—all these make her friendship such as a man's cannot be and ought not to be. It is different, but for that reason it is not less but more delightful. It value in the economy of life is incomputable—it is recreation, rest, encouragement, and stimulus. A great many of these honorable associations are never formed, and many of them are reluctantly a change for the better. Her voice, manners, and many of them are reluciantly abandoned because the world pleases to be talkative. When shall we begin to have a little more confidence in the virtue, self-respect, religion, and forbearance of one spatcher? Why should Demon he forced to another? Why should Damon be forced to give up his pleasant evenings with Pythia because silly people wag their heads and look wise, and whisper: "We could an we would?" Is it, then, concluded and seltled that there is nothing true and honorable left on earth? If those who affirm this did but know half the mischief which did but know ball the mischief which they are thus doing, not only to themselves but others, might they not posssibly stop taiking for at least a quarter of an hour?-New York Tribune.
